Its been parked for three years since I got my Bose LS1, and has been kept as a backup just in case. However, with a recent house move I now no longer have room for it, so it is looking for someone to start using it again. I have tested the PA and it works perfectly, ran vocals through it, micd up an amp as well, also ran CD player and iPhone through AUX with no problems at all. The Marlin case has a ding at the back of the cabinet, it was that way when I bought it and has no influence on the performance at all. Oh, and I am chucking in a Wedge Floor Monitor as well, you can hook it up via the monitor out channel on the front of the Marlin, and control the volume and effects you hear on stage. Im getting on a bit now and humping heavy PA systems in and out of pubs has started to be a pain so Im sacrificing some performing quality for convenience. Download and get more information here. Sign up to Digital Spys newsletter to get the biggest news and features sent straight to your inbox. Ive been using this PA fairly successfully for the last 18 months for my solo singing act in pubs and clubs, mostly without problems, but there is occasionally an issue usually late in the evening where it decides to cut out and distort the sound. You would think this would be a simple case of taking it to a repairer to get it looked at, but I have not found it to be so easy. About a year ago when the problem firstly started to occur, it was taken to the PA repairs expert for the Live Music shop in Peterborough. He put the PA on test at various temperatures and time periods and swore he could not get it to play up. He said he had also taken it to pieces, cleaned it up, tightened a few screws etc etc and put it back together. This cost me 30. So now I find Im still in this situation where the PA will cut out every once in a while it usually picks the most embarrassing moments to do it, but I dont see why I should put up with this. I paid 400 for the system and it has been doing this since nearly new. I would have thought that a good brand of PA system would be able to take 90 minutes of being used without starting to have problems, but maybe someone else out there knows of my frustration, and perhaps even has an answer on how to fix the problem. Is there any pattern to it. Does it only happen in certain venues, for example. If it usually happens quite late, Im thinking it might be overheating. If you have an interval in your act, have you tried turning the power off until you return. Is it powersurge protected. That might be something to investigate. Otherwise, try contacting Carlsbro direct. Are they a UK company. <http://gopherandsquirrelcontrol.com/admin/images/bosch-psb-400-re-manual.xml>

I know people who've gone directly to Marshall with their gear and had excellent service, so maybe Carlsbro can give similar assistance. Good luck, and I hope you solve the problem. They almost certainly just switched it on and left it, or, maybe, just put a signal through occasionally. To produce the fault the signal will need to be fed continuously, i.e. as you do yourself when you are using the system in your work. This sort of fault can be very difficult to find. As the other poster has suggested, I would certainly contact Carlsbro about the problem; they must have encountered this sort of problem in the past and can almost certainly point you in the right direction. It states that its convection cooled, i.e. hasn't got a fan built in but just relies on its heatsinks for cooling. My suggestion, based upon this, is to buy a cheap desktype fan and run it when using the amplifier so that it directs airflow over the rear panel. This may well prevent it from cutting out, which I feel sure is heat related. Not a permanent cure, I know, but it might make the unit more reliable and, also, will indicate whether this problem is temperature related or not. So it seems I have to put up with one or the other. I don't think I should have to put up with either, but a mate told me that PA systems do need to warm up before being used. All Rights Reserved. Something went wrong.
