When you have chosen to cap off your wine bottles with corks rather than the screw caps, you must perform the corking in the correct manner in order to preserve the quality of your batch. Not only do you need to select the right bottles and your preference for corks, but you also need to select the ideal wine corking and wiring machine to use in your winemaking business to ensure that the corks are in securely. Which Machine Is Best for Your Chosen Preference of Cork? You need to consider which corking and wiring machine is best for your corks, especially if you select a manual one. Corks come in natural corks or synthetic corks today. Since the latter does not give a bit when it goes in the bottle, you may need a machine the places a bit more pressure on the corks than other versions do on them. Do You Need a Manual or Automated Corking and Wiring Machine? When you only need to cork and wire a small amount of wine, you may require just a manual machine for the task. However, if you are performing these functions on a large number of bottles, an automated one will be more efficient for you. As we said earlier, your cork material will also have an influence on the type of machine that you require. One example of this is a pneumatic, manual version, as it will assist you in applying enough pressure on synthetic corks for them to go into the bottles in the right manner. Your Budget May Influence Which Machine You Purchase With a new winemaking business, there may be budgetary constraints that can affect the choice of which machine you can purchase for the corking and wiring tasks. Just buy the best machine you can for the funds that you have at your disposal. You may need to wait until your business is more profitable to invest in an elaborate one. Never base your decision on just your budget or you may cause more problems than the savings are worth. Contact us for further facts about our wine corking and wiring machines to learn which one is ideal for your winemaking company. We will guide you in the right direction and provide you with a quote upon request. Remember that we also carry a wide array of other winemaking supplies and equipment for your consideration.
