Cat's eye full movie online

Image: Working Title Films / Amblin Entertainment / Monumental Pictures / The Really Useful Group "Cats," the musical, has been around since 1981, but the story is much older. Andrew Lloyd Webber based his work on the poem, "Old Possum's Book of Practical Cats," by T. S. Eliot. If you know anything about Eliot, you know he was a man prone to using vivid and perplexing imagery and hard-to-understand concepts to paint a surreal picture of the worlds he created. "Cats" brought that to life, taking these whimsical and weird creations and making them three-dimensional. The story is strange yet engaging and has enthralled audiences for years with its unusual structure and storyline. It also has a remarkably memorable and weird cast of characters. From Rumpleteazer to Bustopher Jones, Jellylorum to Carbucketty, there's an eclectic range of personalities and ideas present in the stage production and now in the on-screen version, with an incredible ensemble cast that includes everyone from Dame Judi Dench to Taylor Swift.As a cat person, you have no doubt felt the urge to join the jellie cats in a little song and dance now and then to express how you're feeling. So let's find out which of the cast members best matches your personality. Take the quiz and see! But this season, the timeless, sexy shape got an update, with makeup artists getting playful with their pencils, brushes, and felt tips. Here, our favorites from the fall runways.September 20, 2012Photos: Fairchild Archive (2), Victor VIRGILE/Gamma-Rapho via Getty Images, Karl Prouse/Catwalking/Getty Images, Fairchild Archive (2), Chris Moore/Catwalking/Getty Images, Victor VIRGILE/Gamma-Rapho via Getty ImagesLanvin designer Alber Elbaz told makeup artist Pat McGrath that he wanted "something like a pen-and-ink sketch" when discussing the look for his show. "That's why the makeup is black and white—inky black on the eyes with simple, natural skin," said McGrath. "Like an insignia." Greasy black cream shadow (try CoverGirl Smoky ShadowBlast in Onyx Smoke) was smeared on the lids and up over the brow bone, and erased at the edges with a Q-tip, creating a shape that almost resembled an oversize comma. (For a more toned-down version, keep the cream shadow closer to the lash line.)At Altuzarra, Pecheux dreamed up a geometric-liner look with a futuristic twist. Using a gel formula (we love Estée Lauder Double Wear Stay-in-Place Gel Eyeliner in Stay Onyx) and a fine-tipped synthetic brush (M.A.C. 209 Eye Liner Brush), Pecheux drew a thin line right along the top lashes, pulling it straight past the outer corners. Then he made a second line, starting at the inner corners and creating a right angle so that when he extended it across the crease, it was parallel with the first line.The liner at Ralph Lauren was the most traditional version of the look we saw all season. Makeup artist Tom Pecheux paired his with rosy cheeks, lip balm, and brown mascara. "We wanted to keep the girl cool and not boring," he said backstage. The effect felt effortless but polished—and oh yeah, really pretty.At first glance, the liner look at BCBG seemed like a classic—a thin, winged line with a '60s feel. But on closer examination, the shape was actually drawn a centimeter above the upper lash line, appearing to float across the models' eyelids. "We wanted a graphic liner to complement the clothes, but we wanted to do it a little differently, not so literal," said makeup artist Charlotte Willer. To create the look, Willer lined the upper lashes with Maybelline New York Eye Studio Lasting Drama Gel Eye Liner in Blackest Black using a brush, starting from the inner corners of the eyes and stopping in the middle of the lid. From there, she lifted the line up and extended it past the outer corners.An easy way to update a traditional cat-eye shape? Go with a fun color. That's what McGrath did at Anna Sui when she used cobalt blue theatrical paint to draw on the '60s-inspired shape that winged out to a sharp point. (CoverGirl LiquilineBlast Eyeliner Pencil in Blue Boom and CoverGirl 1-Kit Shadow in Indigo Impact will also do the trick.) "A good way of doing this on yourself is to first draw your shape with liner and clean it up with a cotton swab. Then paint shadow over it with a dampened brush," explained McGrath. (The dot underneath the models' eyes added a playful touch, but it works best on the runway.)At Versus, a sharp point and smudged edges gave the cat eye a punk-rock feel. "The smudged liner gives it a tougher, harder look," explained McGrath. Using black pencil, she outlined the entire eye, stretching the line out into a slight wing that culminated in a sharp point, then softening the edges with a small shadow brush. To add even more definition, McGrath then brushed "loads of brown shadow" along the crease and up over the brow bone. Mascara finished off the look."The Kenzo girl is more sophisticated than last season," explained makeup artist Yadin. "She is cool, sexy, and gorgeous, and found a rich boyfriend and is spending lots of money." That translated into a look with rich red lips and winged liner, which was squared off so it didn't feel too classic or conservative. Yadin used black gel liner, starting halfway along the upper lashes and drawing it straight outward with a brush. (One of our favorites? Bobbi Brown Long-Wear Gel Eyeliner.) Keeping the line thicker at the outer edges, he squared off the ends using a cotton swab dipped in makeup remover (try Simple Eye Makeup Remover).At Erdem, the "line" part of the winged liner was subtracted from the equation, leaving just the wing in its place. Makeup artist Andrew Gallimore called it "floating eyeliner": He used gel liner (we like Smashbox Jet Set Waterproof Eye Liner in Midnight Black) to paint a triangle on the outer corner of each eye, then angled it upward, like a classic cat eye. Sure, it sounds a little weird, but the result was surprisingly cute. Get all the best moments in pop culture & entertainment delivered to your inbox. NEW YORK (CBS.MW) -- The revenue streams of some media companies face a potential threat from Starz Encore Group and RealNetworks joining up to create a new service for movie lovers. Under a deal announced Monday, Starz is bringing its subscription video-on-demand service to the Internet. By collaborating with RealNetworks RNWK, -5.34%, the two companies will roll out a premium movie service that allows high-speed broadband customers to download an unlimited number of movies for $12.95 per month. This service is a bold attempt to offer convenience to consumers at a time when technological advances are sweeping through society. Once, movie fans could only hope to see the likes of Tom Hanks and Tom Cruise at their local multiplex theaters. Then Blockbuster made it possible for people to rent movies and watch them at home. Now, video-on-demand allows the public to order movies without leaving their living rooms. Among the companies that could feel a pinch are Time Warner TWX, which has a large cable-consuming audience in the huge New York City market and advertises heavily for its own video-on-demand service. Plus, Viacom VIAB, VIA, +3.05% and its Blockbuster affiliate could feel a strain as well. Blockbuster BBI, -1.56%, has had a very difficult time keeping pace with the brave new world of high-speed broadband technology. Its brick-and-mortar model stands at a disadvantage at a time when consumers can simply use their computers to satisfy their movie-buying needs. The service will be called Starz! Ticket on Real Movies. It is different from such movie-download services as Movielink and CinemaNow because those require people to pay for each individual download. In an interview with CBS MarketWatch, Starz chief John Sie stressed that customers can select their favorite movies from more than 100 offerings a month, including such popular selections as the Oscar-winning "Chicago," the Johnny Depp smash "Pirates of the Caribbean," and the animated blockbuster "Finding Nemo," plus such classics as "A Raisin In the Sun," "Taxi Driver" and "The Poseidon Adventure." See interview. However, media stocks rallied Tuesday along with the broader market, with Time Warner and Viacom shares both up more than 1 percent. Viacom is a significant shareholder in MarketWatch.com, publisher of this report. Time Warner TWX added 13 cents to $17.43. Dow Jones DJ rose 28 cents to $46.89, despite the specter of a byline strike by many of its reporters on Wednesday and Thursday. News Corp NWS, +0.57%.
