This gives the reader a better sense of the emotion or feelings a writer is trying to portray in a sentence or work. The good old person, place, or thing that often serves as the subject of any sentence that it may reside in. These often are not the subjects of sentences, but they are affected by the subject. We you have more than one or a bunch for that matter. Ways to refer to groups. This helps you say that something belongs to something else. When you need to state ownership. These help us describe a relationship between other words. It is usually used to describe the relative location. These words help us to not sound like robots when we talk to each other. It adds a bit of spice to language. Used when we are referring to one person. A pronoun that takes the place of a subject. If you want to supercharge your message, verbs are where it is at! These are used to describe things in a more general way. When you are ready to practice your skills with all of these parts of speech at once, head over to these worksheets. Just like a character in a play, a part of speech is to a sentence. All words used in a sentence follow one of the categories of parts of speech. How a word is placed in a sentence to be delivered determines its part of speech. There are general considered to be eight parts of speech in the English language. Based on frequency of usage they would be nouns, verbs, adjectives, pronouns, adverbs, prepositions, conjunctions, and interjections. Nouns give sentences subjects such as things, places, and people (yes that's mixed around) names. Verbs tell us what action is taking place. The tense of the verb must always agree with the subject of the sentence. Verbs can also be used to express a state of being. Adjectives are your normal run of the mill descriptive words. We use adjectives all the time to modify nouns and pronouns. Pronouns give us diversity by allow use to replace common names with other names. Without them language would seem much more formal than it does in today's spoken form. Adverbs basically are you're main word modifiers (usually on adjectives, verbs, or another word type). When you need to join something, be it a clause, phrase, or just words, we use conjunctions. Need to really express emotion in your writing, then you need an injection (Pow!) Need to make a phrase? You'll probably need little words called prepositions. The Different Parts of Speech 1. Noun The United States of America is the wealthiest country in the world. My shoelaces are tied up. Basketball is playing worldwide. A noun is used for any idea, place, person, or thing. Nouns are of two kinds: proper and common nouns. The starting alphabet for a proper noun is always with a capital letter, such as Virginia. The proper nouns are names for specific places, persons, and concepts. While, common nouns such as a chair, table, fan, etc., are common words. Nouns are sometimes supported by an article(another part of speech). 2. Pronouns I have a beautiful dress for the festival. You are so irresponsible. They have been playing cricket for two hours. These are the substitutes for specific nouns. They are used to avoid the repetition of nouns. The pronoun is only comprehended when the speaker or writer mentions the specific noun to which the pronoun refers, such as She, Him, He, It, and They. 3. Verbs John works in a renowned company. The man sat across the road. The teacher yelled when students were not listening to her. He played well in the last match. It is the action word in a sentence or a phrase, such as go, run, swim, sit, etc. Not all verbs are used to define literal action, feelings are also verbs in a sentence, but they are nonaction. Processes like loving, thinking and disliking are all nonaction verbs. 4. Adjectives She made a delicious lasagna. A handsome prince was riding on a horse across the lush, green grass. Do you think this brownie tastes too sweet? These are the modifiers of nouns in a sentence. They are placed in a sentence to give more details and describe a particular noun. For instance, If you ask your friend about his mother's health condition, he replies, "Her condition is serious." You'll be confused about how serious she is? 5. Adverbs Emma runs well. He plays the piano smoothly. She can deliver food quickly. These words are the modifiers of verbs and adjectives. These words usually end with -ly, such as quickly, slowly, etc. 6. Prepositions She put the books on the table. James was sitting at the park. The wind was blowing over the hills. Her success is beyond my expectations. Prepositions are words in a sentence to describe the relationship of the subject, object, or the action that happens. There are prepositions of time, place, etc., that tell us the location or the time at which an event occurs. 7. Conjunctions The pizza is tasty but spicy too. May has two cats and a fluffy dog. These words connect two clauses to give a single idea or show a connection between two ideas. The words like, and, but, and so are examples of conjunctions. 8. Articles Maria is an extrovert She's an actress. Please hand me the changers. These are the connecting words for a noun. They always support a noun. For nouns that start from a vowel, the article "an" is used while "a" is used for a consonant. The article "the" is used to specify the noun. In grammar, a part of speech is a linguistic category of words, which is generally defined by the syntactic or morphological behavior of the lexical item in question. Common linguistic categories include noun and verb, among others. There are open word classes, which constantly acquire new members, and closed word classes, which acquire new members infrequently if at all. Almost all languages have the lexical categories noun and verb, but beyond these there are significant variations in different languages. For example, Japanese has as many as three classes of adjectives where English has one; Chinese, Korean and Japanese have nominal classifiers whereas European languages do not; many languages do not have a distinction between adjectives and adverbs, adjectives and verbs or adjectives and nouns, etc. This variation in the number of categories and their identifying properties entails that analysis be done for each individual language. Nevertheless the labels for each category are assigned on the basis of universal criteria. Below you'll find printable parts of speech worksheets. On these worksheets, students learn to identify the part of speech of a word according to how it is used in a given sentence. Then, they are given opportunity to practice writing sentences using the specified part of speech.
