Android 8 easter egg app

Google just fell the last beta Android 11 this afternoon, and inside it is the new Easter Egg! That's what it offers. The hidden Easter egg in Android changes from release to release, but not often they return completely. In the case of Android 11, the first part of the Easter egg is the volume dial we saw in previous teaser from Google. The "return until 11" is completely made in this release, with the dial stop at 10, but some other tests later, will pass and show the logo 11. After logo 11 appears, however, you will see an emoji cat in a toast message at the bottom of the screen. This indicates that the second part of the Easter egg — the game Neko Cat — was enabled. If this sounds familiar, it is because the same Easter Egg was used back in Android 7.0 Tougat. Our friends at How-To Geek have a great explainer on how the game worked again in the day, but it changed at that time. Now, the live "Cat Controls" in the new Android 11 control menu. To access it, test the power menu and in the section full of smart home controls, tap "See other applications." At the top of the list, you should see "Cat Controls". From there, you will need to activate all three tools — water kettle, food bowl and toy. After these were enabled, the process of getting a cat takes a little. You will have to fill the food bowl and water kettle, then play with the toy sometimes. After that, simply leavephone alone for a few minutes and, if you are lucky, you will have a notification that a cat has arrived! this notification can use Android 11 bubbles function to let the cat hover over the screen, and within the "app," you can rename the cat as you choose. as on nougat, you can also share pictures of that cat to any other application on the phone. when a new cat comes, too, vibrates the phone with a model that, especially on a 4 pixel, is eerily near purring. regarding android easter eggs go, android 11 could be one of the best simply because it exploits so many new features on this release. kyle bradshaw and damien wilde contributed to this article. ftc: We use self-income affiliate links.
