I've been there, I've taken a photo to my designerThe way I want you to cut my hair. Usually screenshot the first look I see, and quite often, is a photo of a white woman. (A white woman with impeccable cut however, but a woman whose hair does not look like mine.) Of course, I get tons of inspiration directly from the page to explore on Instagram, and Pinterest may be useful, but I don't always find what I'm looking for. Debra Shigley knows the fight. And that's why it started the Colour app, the first database of inspiration for hairstyle for black women. I browsed Color and was happy by what looked like a multicultural magazine of hair in digital form with so many styles to draw inspiration. With categories like Straight, Updos, Curly, Bob, Bantu, and many others, it is difficult not to find the perfect hairstyle idea. The color is so brilliant that once you are in a category (such as waves), you can also filter by occasion (date nights, work, gala, wedding, holiday, etc.). If you live in Atlanta, you can also book and confirm appointments through the app with a color designer coming to your home. Although you can't book an appointment if you're in, say, New York City or Stockholm, the app offers phone consultations with customers around the world. There is also a review section where you can see pictures of real people and feedback on their experience with Color stylists. I talked to Shigley on the phone and asked about his personal hair experiences. He described a "vitalization"with hair, starting from having a white Jewish mother who did the best that could styling vicious hair of the daughter (the father of shigley is Afro-Jamaican). talked about past experiences going to the mainstream salons that often would not have idea what to do with its hair texture, before finally experimenting the world of black hair salons. with color, shigley wants black women to feel beautiful and included in the world of beauty. aims to eliminate a lot of problems that many have with traditional salon experiences and make it easier for us to get our hair done. done. hair and eye color changer app. hair color changer app online free. hair color changer app free. hair color changer app android. hair color changer app online. hair color changer app reddit. hair color changer app apk. hair color changer app ios
