Jana, ex-suaŠa lawyer, turned to online learning to discover new interests, including a newly-discovered enthusiasm by Shakespeare after signing up for Harvard's life and work. Read to find out how your learning experience inspired a new chapter in your life as a writer and educator Shakespeare. Which Edx course or program did you take and what were your goals in taking it? The first course I made was the life and work of Harvard Course The Shakespeare. Living in Switzerland, in a non-English tongue country, was my first real encounter with the bard. As I enjoyed completely from the course, so I decided to sign up for the Outsideries Harvard Shakespeare program, in which we studied three pieces, including Hamlet, the trader of Venice and Othello. My main goal was to get a vision of some of Shakespeare's works, especially for my own personal interest. How was your learning experience online? Online learning proved to be an incredible experience. A lawyer for education, I stopped working for more than 10 years behind to raise my children and how they are aging, I have more time to plan a new professional experience. Online learning provides all the flexibility I am looking for as well as access to matters that would be difficult to study in the living city. The courses were extremely well designed and easily understood. Their several formats were instructive and fun. How did your learning impact your career, life or community? My learning experience had a great impact on my life as you triggered my recycling and helped me find a starting point to do this. I'm already looking forward to signing up for any additional EDX courses in relation to Shakespeare. How do you plan to use your learning in the future? What next to you? The course and program I took I gave the encouragement to continue my journey in Shakespeare's study, to deepen my knowledge of his work, as well as the historical and political origins that prevailed in Erizabethan and Jacobiano. My ultimate goal is to teach or write articles on specific aspects of Shakespeare's work. What advice would you give EDX new students? The advice I would give is allocating enough time to take advantage of the courses. Other personal searches in connection with the context of the courses enrich the subjects studied well. This is what friends and colleagues said when Roxanne Coady left New York in 1989 to open a bookstore in a small town. Of course, they believed in it. She had been one of the best tax accounts of the PaÀ. She was whipped, directed and tireless - À è à "Àf 82 different plates À è à è" as she likes to say, which is just a slight exaggeration. She still grew up in the business: like a girl, she kept the books for her father's bakeries. À è à è "If you were to choose a dream person to get your own bookstore, it would be Roxanne À è à è" says friend and fan of the host of Public Ricio de Connecticut. Cadada almost proved that all err, for the first years, RJ Julia Independent Booksellers, located in the main drag in Madison, Connecticut, grew by the leaps and limits. O Impressive growth, however, obscured an incapacity of DotClick to transform a profit. Coady says she ignored the budgets and "Blow probably $ 250,000" of the money she and her husband, an old real estate developer, I had saved. It was twice as much as she should have invested, but she could not resist going all the wine and food in bookshots, elegant extra-resisting bags and excessive bonus. yet to solve problems, I put more money on them À è à è "Say it - à è à è As a blonde and book lover, she let her heart take on. She built the most attractive bookstore she could imagine Inar, while it neglects to build a sustainable business. À è à è "Now À è à è" Say it: À è à è "I'm combining your head heart. Thirteen years after changing dramatically careers, Coady, 54, proved that you could pull After all. At the same time that almost half of the county's independent bookstores closed, RJ Julia reached more than $ 3 million in annual sales and a modest profit. And coade, its always elegant, opinioative and excited owner , made the successful accountant transition for successful bookellerer. A bookseller waiting for Hapocoanty's passion for reading and his talent for accounting were inspired by his parents, who survived the Holocaust and Immigrated to the United in 1948, establishing himself on the east side of New York. Although his mother still understood English, she read to her children anyway, pronouncing the words phonetically. Once Coady learned to read, she wanted to face the Book of every child in the library in alphabetic order. I thought: À è à è - "What did I just do? À è" Now, Madison is a different story. Although the commercial district consisted of only one long block in Boston Post Road, there is an art house and an elegant Italian restaurant in front of R.J. Julia. There are a variety of shops and boutiques. There are even a Starbucks. An entrepreneur, Coady ran a long way. She is running RJ. Julia as a business, with budgets, training manual and more structured evaluations. By coincidence, her son Edward and the store were born in the same year. Since turning 13 this year, Coady says, both had their bar Mitzvahs: Edward became a man, R.J. Julia a mature business. In fact, by adding corporate discipline to the bookstore continues to be a challenge, especially without the financial incentives that she had at her disposition in an important accounting firm. Instead, Coady offers a casual and fun atmosphere in which books can be hers passionate from her. They constantly remind her that the operating word in independent bookshs is independent. When Coady tried to get the team to use correspondence R.j. Julia shirts, they subsided. So she bought R.j. Julia but no one used for a long time. A retail box of green r.j.
