(November 2018) The equal rights party was the name by several political parties of the different XIX Século in the United States. The first part was the locofocos, during the 1830s and 1840. The anti-Rent party during the anti-Rent war was also known for this name during the 1840s and 1850. Another party for this name ran Victoria Woodhull for the President of the United States and Frederick Douglass for the US vice president in the presidential election of 1872. He also was known as Popular Party, the Cosmo Party Politics and Radical National Reformers. The fourth was the party that ran Belva Ann Lockwood for the president in the presidential elections of 1884 and 1888 and Marietta Stow and Alfred H. Love (and replace him, Charles Stuart Wells) for Vice-President, respectively. This was also known as the National Equal Rights Party. Emma Beckwith ran for Brooklyn mayor under this same party. Click for PDF Mr. President, Joint House 264, before us today, which predicted equality before the law for men and women, represents one of the most clear opportunities that may come to declare our faith principles that have shaped our constitution. It provides a legal basis for the attack on the most subtle, most widespread and most institutionalized form of prejudice that exists. Discrimination against women, only based on their sex, is so widespread that it seems many normal, natural and right people. Legal expression of prejudice in reason of religious or political belief has become a smaller problem in our society. The prejudice based on the race is at least under systematic attack. There is no reason for optimism that he will begin to die with the current generation, older. It is time to act to ensure full equal opportunities for citizens who, although mostly, suffer the restrictions that are commonly imposed on minorities, for women. The argument that this change will not solve the problem of sexual discrimination is not relevant. If the argument was used against a civil rights bill - as has been used in the past - the prejudice that is behind it would be embarrassing. Of course laws will not eliminate the prejudice of the heart of human beings. But that is not reason to allow prejudice to continue to be consecrated in our laws - the injustice perpetuating by Inaction. The change is necessary to clarify innermost ambiguities and inconsistencies in our legal planning. For example, the Constitution guarantees due process, in the 5th and 14th alterations. But the applicability of the due process of sex distinctions is not clear: women are excluded from some faculties and state universities. In some states, the restrictions are placed on a married woman who engages in an independent business. Women can not be chosen for some Juris. Women still heavier criminal sanctions than men committing the same crime. What would be the legal effects of the equal rights change really be? The alteration of equal rights would rule only the between the state and its citizens - not relationships between private citizens. The change would be largely self-executive, this is, and federal or state conflict laws would be ineffective one year after the date of ratification without new actions of Congress or State, legislatures . The adversaries of the change affirm that their ratification launches the law into a state of confusion and would result in a lot of litigation to establish its meaning. This objection overlooks the influence of the legislative history in determining the intention and recent activities of many groups preparing for legislative changes in this direction. The laws of state labor applies only to women, such as those limiting hours of work and weights to be raised would become dead unless the legislature has applied to men. From the beginning of 1970, most states would have some laws that would be affected. However, changes are being made so quickly as a result of the Tactile VII of the 1964 civil rights law, is likely that, at the time when the amendment of equal rights It would make it effective, no conflicting state laws would remain. Anyway, years has been a great controversy as to the usefulness of women of these state laws of work. There has never been doubts that they have worked in women who need or want to work overtime and women who need or want to better pay jobs; And there has been persuasive evidence on how many women benefit from the archaic policy of the laws. After the law of Delaware, it was revoked in 1966, there were no complaints of women for any of the state agency that could have been addressed.
