WISQARSTM of CDC (Web-based Injury Statistics Query and Reporting System) is an interactive and online database that provides fatal and non-pregnant lesions, violent death and lesion data cost from a variety of trusted sources. Researchers, media, public health professionals and the public can use WISQARSTM data to learn more about public health and economic burden associated with non-intentional and violence-related injuries in the United States. Download WISQARS Information sheet icon pdf[360KB, 2 pages] Users can search, sort and view lesion data and create reports, charts and maps based on the following: Intended injury (non-intentional injury, violence, murder, legal intervention, suicide/intentional self-harm) Mechanism (due to) of injuries (e.g., fall, fire, firearms, motor vehicle accident, poisoning, suffocation) Body region (e.g., traumatic brain injuries, torso, upper and lower extremities) * The data are from the National Vital Statistics System (NVSS), National Center for Health Statistics. Use WISQARSTM to: Shows the size of public health and the economic impact of the problem of injury Describes, compares and monitors trends in non-intentional and violence-related injuries Identifying new orAccident problems Identifying people at risk of injury Provide reliable surveillance data for program decisions and policies Non-fatal accident data WISQARSTM Non-grateful injury data include: non-fat lesion reports that provide national estimates of injuries treated in U.S. hospital emergency departments (ED) for intent and mechanism (fall) of injury, race/age, sex and disposition when released by ED (hospitalized, moved for reasons). The main cause of non-gravious injuries shows the ranking of the main causes of non-gravious injuries treated in ED for the age and sex of the injured patient, the intent of injury and disposition when released by ED. That's an idea. The data comes from the National Surveillance System for Electronic Injuries – All the accident programs (NEISS-AIP) operated by the United States Consumer Product Safety Commission with the CDC NSCPC. WISQARSTM violent death data includes the following information: Number of deaths and deaths related to violence Intention of injuries (intentionally, murders, legal intervention, suicide, undetermined intent, and murder followed by suicide) Mechanism of injuries (e.g., firearms, cut/foolashes/stab, suspension/suffering, poisoning) Details on victims and offenders, including demographics, rapport between victims and recent incidentthe National Violent Death Reporting System (NVDRS) managed by CDC NCIPC. Accident data cost* WISQARSTM provides estimates of the cost of injury death (including violent deaths) and non-material injuries in which the patient was treated and released by a hospital or ED. The cost of accident reports includes the following information: medical costs (e.g. treatment and rehabilitation) Costs of loss of work (e.g. lost wages, benefits and self-reported household services) Combined costs (more medical work loss) Further information on the cost of accident reporting > This is not good. Lesion data costs are based on medical loss and work costs in 2010. Cost estimates for the last few years will be available in the future. The fatal data comes from NVSS. Non-fat data comes from NEISS-AIP. The estimated cost of loss of work for life and life of the unit has been developed by the Institute for Research and Evaluation of the Pacific (PIRE). Filters in Google Sheets allow you to analyze data in the document by showing only the things you want. However, it changes how others see the document, too. Here's how to use the filtering views to leave the vision of each employee unchanged. Turn on Google Sheets and open a spreadsheet to start. Click data > Filter View > Create new filter view. Row numbers and column letters will turn into a dark gray color when activated. At this time, you should give your view filter a name to distinguish it from any other view you do in the future and control the range is correct. You can always change bothlater, if necessary. for this guide, we want to filter anything in the table that has a price per unit greater than $10. Click the filter icon in the field to "Price per unit." for this next part, you can choose to filter values or conditions to analyze data. "Filter by Value" offers a simple way to view data and choose specific values in the column. "Filter by Condition" gives you a much larger approach with the option of adding custom formulas to find data. First, click "filter by condition" to expand the section, click the drop-down box, and then click "greater than" option. related: how to highlight a row in google sheets using conditional formatting enter the conditions for the filter and click the ok button just like this, now you can see all the products that cost more than $10 per unit without interrupting the view of other contributors. since you can activate only one filter at a time, you can stack filters for each column to increase data by analyzing the potential. all you have to do is click on another of the filter icons and repeat the same process. to disable all filter views, click x in the top right corner of the sheet. when you want to activate a filtered view, click > data filter view and then choose a filter to display. one of the great things about the filter view is the ability to show the filtered data without altering the display of the spreadsheet of other employees. However, if someone wants to hate yourviews, can—even people who have access only to the view. Click data > Filter Views, and then choose one of the customized opinions made by other employees. Although this is a very fundamental use of a filtered view, there seems to be no limits to its use. You can stack multiple filters and also add custom formulas to analyze and sort data without having to interrupt other people you are working with. with. fortune 500 safety data sheet
