The Gettysburg Address

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent, a new nation, conceived in Liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle-field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field, as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate—we can not consecrate—we can not hallow—this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it, far above our poor power to add or detract.

The world will little note, nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion—that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom—and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

—Abraham Lincoln

The Highwayman

Richard was born in 1702. He had twelve brothers and sisters and his parents had no money. Just stop for a minute and imagine that. When Richard was seventeen, he became a highwayman. He stopped coaches and robbed the rich people, but he never harmed or killed anybody.

One night, he went to the Boar's Head, a pub in the countryside. He saw the landlord's beautiful daughter Bess and he really liked her. She had long black hair and very dark eyes. He asked her for a kiss and she said yes. They fell in love. Richard promised to return the following night at 12 pm, after the pub had closed.

Unfortunately, Sam the stable boy also loved Bess. He saw her kiss Richard and he hated it. He was eaten up with jealousy. The next day, he went to town and he found the king's men. He told them what he had seen and heard. The king's men wanted Richard because he was a famous highwayman.

That evening, they went to the pub. They grabbed Bess. They took her upstairs to her bedroom and made her stand at the window. From that window, she could see the road that Richard would take. They tied her up and they put a gag over her mouth. They strapped a musket to her body. She struggled but she could not break free. The king's men laughed and joked. Ha ha, the beautiful but stupid landlord's daughter could watch them shoot her thieving no-good lover! Or take him prisoner and hang him!

Bess struggled to get free, but the knots were too tight. However at last, one finger reached the trigger on the musket.

At the dead of night, she saw Richard approaching on his powerful black horse. She pursed her lips and sent him a silent goodbye kiss. Then she pressed the trigger and slumped forward – dead.

The shot rang out over the dark, quiet lane. Richard's horse, startled, bucked. Richard turned around and galloped away.

The next day, he heard about what the king's men had done. He realised that beautiful Bess had given her life to save him. He jumped on his horse and galloped back to that pub. He wanted to find these men and kill them. He hurtled towards the pub. The king's men were in there, drinking beer. They fired; Richard rode on. They fired again and he fell. At that moment, he went to join his darling Bess.

Now, at night, in that village, when the moon shines brightly, you can hear a horse's hooves. If you are a sensitive person who believes in True Love, you can see them, over by the oak tree, where the old pub used to be – beautiful brave Bess and her loyal sweetheart, Richard. Together forever.
