Â, Pratical Quotes Quiz You should never have a call alone as a full sentence, or, worse, like an incomplete sentence, in your writing. The quotation will appear disconnected from your own thoughts and the flow of your sentences. Ways to integrate the quotations properly into your own phrases, with the correct use of the score, are explained below. There are at least four ways to integrate the quotations. 1. Enter the quotation with a complete phrase and a cholon. Example: "Where I lived, and that I lived," Thoreau directly affirms his purpose to go to the forest: "I went to the forest because I wanted to deliberately live, front only the essential facts of life, and see if I could not learn What he had to teach, and no, when I got to die, find out that I had not lived." Example: Thoreau's philosophy can be summarized best for your repeated request for people to ignore the insignificant details of life: "Our life is diverted by details. An honest man hardly needs to tell more than his ten fingers, or in extreme cases he can add his ten fingers, and approach the rest. Simplicity, Simplicity, Simplicity!" Example: Thoreau ends your rehearsal with a metaphor: "Time is but the sweep I go to a fishing". This is an easy rule of remembering: if you use a complete sentence to introduce a quotation, you need two points after the sentence. Be careful not to confuse a Clon (:) with a point and vray (:). Using a cell in this situation will probably create a vragulating amendment, one of the central border-border errors. 2. Use an introductory or explanatory phrase, but there is a complete phrase, separate from the quotation with a cell. Example: In "where he lived, and what lived," says Thoreau directly states his purpose to enter the forest when he says, "I went to the forest because he wanted to deliberately live, forward only the essential facts of life and see if I could not learn what he had to teach, and no, when I came to die, find out that I had not lived." Example: Thoreau suggests the consequences of making us slaves to progress when he says: "We do not walk on the railway, which rides on us." Example: Thoreau asks: "Why should we live in such a hurry and waste of life?" Example: According to Thoreau, "we walked on the railroad; she walks at NOS." You should use a vray to separate your own words from the quotation when your introductory or explanatory phrase ends with a verb like "says," he said, "he recalls," "Remember" "Questions" and "Question" (and much more). You should also use a cell when you enter a quotation with a phrase as "according to Thoreau". 3. Make the quotation a part of your own phrase without any punctuation between your own words and the words you are quoting. Example: "Where I lived, and that I lived," Thoreau directly affirms his purpose to go to the forest, when he says that "I went to the forest because he wanted to deliberately live, front only the essential facts of life and see if I do not He could learn what he had to teach, and no, when I came to die, find out that I had not lived." Example: Thoreau suggests the consequences of becoming slaves to progress when he says that" nes no. We walked on the railroad; walks in. " Example: Thoreau argues that "shams and delubers are estimated by truths solids, while reality is fabulous." Example: According to Thoreau, people are often "thrown off the lane throughout the part and mosquito wing that falls on the rails." Note that the word "that" is used in three of the examples above, and when it is used as it is in the examples, "which" replaces the cell that would be needed without "that" in the phrase. You usually have a choice, so when you start a phrase with a phrase like "Thoreau says". You can add a vray after "says" (Thoreau says: "Cutting") or You can add the word "that" without vragula (Thoreau says "quoting") 4. Use short short Some words - as part of your own sentence. Example: "Where I lived, and that I lived," Thoreau states that his withdrawal to the forest around Walden Pond was motivated by his desire to "live deliberately" and facing only "the essential facts of life." Example: Thoreau argues that people blindly accept "shams and illusions", such as the "more solid truths" while about reality as "fabulous". Example: Although Thoreau "drink [s] in" current of time, it can "detect as shallow that is." When you integrate quotes, in this way, you do not use any special score. Instead, you should punctuate the phrase as it would be if all the words were your own. Without a punctuation it is necessary in the sentences above in part because the sentences do not follow the pattern explained under the number 1 and 2 above: There is no complete phrase in front of the customs And a word like "says," "said," or "ask" does not appear directly in front of the words quoted. All of all above for the integration of quotes are correct, but you should avoid trusting too much in just one method. Instead you should use a variety of all. Notice the score! Note that there are only two punctuation marks that are used à ¢ à ¢
