This implicit, or indeed explicit, imperialist rhetoric had paradoxical effects. Nigerian pastors have consistently exploited the spirit behind this sort of claim for their own national and continental version of Manifest Destiny (not to mention the increased visibility and fortunes of their specific ministries), redeeming a history of abjection and exclusion through a historically unprecedented mission as the vanguard of a redeemed humanity. For Olukoya, divine gifts such as healing or prosperity, are constantly at risk of being lost not only because of a lack in the believer (a faith that is too weak, a refusal to fully renounce sin) but principally because of the activities of satanic "conspirators" and "enemies" who seek the ruin and destruction of the believer at every turn.
