There is an old belief that Macs do not have the same crapware/malware problem that Windows does. However, with the rise of Macs in recent years, it is no longer true. Our friends at How-To Geek explain how OS X crapware works, and how to avoid it. Lifehacker's experienced readers are the first to speed-dial when it's time to heal a... Read moreMuch like on Windows, Mac adware typically comes from fake links in search engines and "bundle download" sites like Download.com. One of the worst offenders? Fake versions of VLC. Do a quick search on Bing or Yahoo (Google blocks the results of crapware) for VLC and you will find a ton of fake installers (like the one above) that put adware on your system. If you end up with any of this adware, it tends to hijack the new search of the browser tab and the home page on obnoxious support alerts that try to deceive the installation even more adware. Most of these sticks to the browser as old adware obnoxious, but How-To Geek found that some can dig even deeper: These most serious pieces of malware install as a demon, or a service, which works in the background and behind the scenes. You can find these things in the /Library/LaunchAgents or /Library/LaunchDaemons folder, which will have some really strange objects that simply do not belong. This folder could also be used for real things from real applications, so do not go to completely clean this folder or something. Of course, like Windows, you willthrough some circles to actually install this stuff, and any educated Mac user will recognize most of this software as fish. However, since most people do not think that Macs have this problem, they could drop their guard. To keep these things out of the system (and out of your family and friend's computers), make sure you can download only apps approved by the Mac App Store. System Preferences > Security and privacy and make sure that the box under "Allow apps downloaded from" is set on Mac App Store and identified developers. Of course, when you absolutely have to download something from an unapproved developer, make sure you read the installer carefully and avoid accepting any other installation. Have you ever installed a program just to find out it came with some ridiculous, hidden crapware... Getting apps to run is a little harder. Fortunately, Chrome APK Packager can help transform existing Android apps into Chrome-friendly packages.Google has made the first batch of Android apps available for Chrome. It was just a matter... Read more Launch the application on your Android phone and you will see a list of the apps you have installed. Select one, tap "Generate Chrome APK" and create a folder for you on your phone storage. Copy this to your computer and upload it using our guide above and you are ready to run Android apps in your browser. As usual, there is no guarantee that apps will work because this is quite unofficial work around, but this application simplifies the process of getting Chrome-ready packages a lot. [APP]Chrome APK Packager-Generates Chrome App Packages installed on your phone | XDA via Android PoliceUpdate: the app was withdrawn from the Play Store, presumably due to the name "Chrome". Read more PWA2APK Google has recently added support for Trusted Web Activity (TWA) in its Chrome browser for Android, essentially simplifying the process for people making progressive web applications (PWA) for the Play Store. Now, a new service emerged to exploit this development, allowing people to quickly transform their progressive web applications into APK. PWA2APK, identified by XDA-Developers, is a web-based service that brings some of the legs out of creating the all-important APK file. Currently, developers who want to manually create an APK from their web progressive app if they want to publish it in the Play Store. But this service quickly spits out an APK signed TWA-enabled, like youURL of your progressive web app and check the property of that website. The service is free to use, and it is also added the ability for developers to display an APK source code. So, if you have any hesitation on using PWA2APK due to security concerns, the latter addition could go a way to relieve your fears. Here, ladies and gentlemen. The crème de la crème. The Android apps that are located alone at the top of the pantheon. These apps have become ubiquitous with Android and if you are looking for ...News of PWA2APK comes after Google added TWA support in Chrome for Android earlier this year. The feature replaces the WebView standard used by previous web apps, essentially by hiding the Chrome user interface (e.g. address bar and other elements) to give a better look. TWA also prepares web applications for the Play Store by offering native support for notifications, background synchronization, Chrome autofill, and sharing API. So you should not be surprised to see a load of new progressive web apps on the Play Store this year.
