

I'm not a bot

Looking for some inspiration from the world of MAD Magazine, this article is about creating your own Snappy Answers to Stupid Questions (SATSQ). Alfred E. Neuman first introduced the concept in 1968 with a collection of humorous answers to questions. To get you started, here are a couple examples: Q: Did you catch that fish? A: No, I talked him into giving himself up. A: No, I was sitting here minding my own business when the crazy thing jumped into my pail. A: No, it's a plastic model to get people like you to start fascinating conversations. Q: (From lady to fellow bus-rider) Isn't my baby beautiful? A: That's a baby? A: Yes, in a Jabba-The-Hutt sort of way. I was just being lucky. I guess. I mean, who's really into all that geeky stuff? -from Allen Hord If your friends jumped off a bridge, would you follow them? Maybe I'd land on someone fat and squishy! Or maybe it would mess up my hair? Can't we do something like this at Disney World instead? -from Allen Hord Did you bring lunch today? No, I'm gonna eat yours. I just carry around this bag because it looks cool. or...I might puke up yesterday's leftovers and eat them again! -from Allen Hord How was school today? The cops will fill you in. It was pretty normal, a usual day. -from Allen Hord Excuse me, is this the end of the line? No, we're standing at the front, but facing backwards. -from Allen Hord Are you gonna eat that? Only if you really want it to be eaten. I was thinking of having it bronzed and putting it on my mantle instead. -from Allen Hord May I have this dance? Sure, I don't want it anyway. -from Alycia Bencloski How are you today? Great! I just love your company. Or...I'm fine, I just needed some tissues. -from Jessica Bencloski Will there be anything else? Wasn't this enough? Not right now, but I'll come back and buy the whole store one item at a time. Thanks for reminding me! -from D. Brent Walton Are you gonna eat that? No, I was trying to see if it gets colder when you stare at food. Or...I was testing how long you'd go without saying something about it. -from Nelson Shields You're raising a farm? No, I keep the cattle as pets. -from Trish Furino Is this your email link? No, it's for you to write yourself a note. Or...it's an invitation for a U.S. Postal mail carrier to come pick up your mail, and please don't send anything! -from Jim King The show MAD features humorous sketches with quick-witted responses. One segment, "Snappy Answers to Stupid Questions," involves people reacting absurdly to mundane or silly questions. In one episode, a painter asks a jogger if they are a jogger, and when the jogger replies yes, the painter says it's too bad they're not a swimmer. The jogger then lets out an exaggerated scream and jumps into a nearby pool. The "Snappy Answers" segment is often absurd and silly, with people responding to ridiculous questions in creative ways. In another example, a man is asked if he had an accident after being seen with a necktie that looks like a tree. He replies that the directions said "Turn onto oak," but then later admits that he actually did have an accident. The segment has appeared in only four episodes of MAD and features various humorous scenarios, including a man who claims to be testing his wooden airbag after a car accident, and a lady Gaga impersonator who is asked if they had an accident. A collection of humorous responses to silly questions, including "Are you all right?" and "Is it cold out?" Also included are book covers and information about Mad's other publications.

Al jaffee snappy answers to stupid questions. Snappy answers to stupid questions mad magazine. Snappy answers to stupid questions pdf. Snappy answers to stupid questions is it raining. More mad snappy answers to stupid questions. Snappy answers to stupid questions book. Snappy answers to stupid questions examples.