If the bladder is removed during a process called cystectomy, which is sometimes done in a patient with cancer, a person can still survive. It no longer has a significant role in digestion. Bladder B. An entire organism is made up of different organ systems. Evolutionarily, over time, they have become unnecessary. Each of these organs perform important functions, but a person can live without them. Instead, they are made up of groups of cells. The bladder performs an important role in collecting urine that is to be excreted from the body, but it is not necessary for a person to have a bladder in order to survive.
