While many of us were preparing the new computers, phones and consoles we received during the holidays, world health experts have released news that can do some reflection twice on video games. The World Health Organization has issued a draft of its 2018 edition of the International Disease Classification, which added "receiving disorder" to the list of disorders due to abuses. It states that disorder is a behavior that includes a proven control of use, the priority of the game on other interests and activities, and continued use despite serious negative consequences for a period of at least 12 months (or shorter for more extreme cases). The World Health Organization recently classified gambling addiction as a disorder. (Photo: Getty Images) Does this mean governments are going to put warning stickers on PS4 and parents will have to give their Minecraft pickup patches to their children? Will temperance groups increase and demand a ban on Candy Crush? Not yet, anyway. But this can be a step towards getting better help for children and adults whose excessive use began to destroy their health and well-being. "This is great, because we can actually call it as we see it," Michael Rich, MD, Center on Media and Child Health Director and an associate pediatrician professor at Harvard Medical School, said Yahoo Lifestyle. The ICD would not only allow doctors to codify their diagnosis so that insurance companies will pay for treatment, but also helps to raiseof the problem between patients and doctors. "It creates an environment where people can get trained in how to recognize, diagnose and treat," explained Rich. not that this is a completely new idea, of course. since 1990, people are discussing the idea of internet and gambling addiction. the American psychiatric association has obtained only to declare "Internet gambling disorder" as a category proposed in the last edition of the diagnostic and statistical manual of mental disorders (dsm.) just as for additions of sex and gambling, experts disagree on the fact that you can equate this behavior with the abuse of drugs or alcohol or if it is just another way for people to make moral judgments. "[P]utting that the official label on [games] incautiously triviates real mental health issues such as depression and social anxiety disorder, which deserve the treatment and full attention of the medical community," the entertainment software association said in a statement that urges the oms to reconsider this classification, according to PCGamer.com. after treating many teenagers at boston children's hospital, Rich said the problem is real. "The patients I saw have left many schools," Yahoo said. "I had two children who were brought by me after they attempted suicide, one drinking bleach, because their parents took away their router." There are other horror stories that received a lot of media attention unlike the 28-year-old man in the South Korean who died of a heart attack after playing a video game for 50 hours. Rich agrees with ESA on a matter, however, which is that calling this "deception" does not work. "The problem is that when we think about the word addiction or addiction, we think about bums on skid row sucking cheap wine or doped in a shooting gallery. We don't think about our 10-year-old child who has a form because he has to stop playing minecraft and go to bed." The center on media and child health uses the problematic term oo of interactive media (pimu) to understand not only videogame, but also the compulsive ooo of social media, display pornography and bingeing of online information (following wikipedia or youtube links for hours at a time). Rich said that pimu often occurs in teenagers who have anxiety or attention deficit issues and look for interactive media as a way to self-medicate or distract. Excessive use of these media can lead to physical problems such as obesity, poor hygiene, dehydration and sleep deprivation, and mental health problems because they have withdrawn from the world. When the kids come to rich, they usually don't think they have a problem. "They will say: "It's not out of control. I can stop at any time," he said. but when he asks them to try to limit themselves to two hours a day, they find that they can't. "This is their time to come to Jesus, when they realize that they have deceivedMany of them will say: "I think I have to stop it completely for a while. "Sometimes the treatment of disorder means going cold turkey, but unlike drugs or alcohol, most people will have to go online eventually to live their lives. Luckily, Rich found out that this is possible. "Many of them will not return to what they had in trouble with — game, social media, or porn," he said. "They focus their self-regulation on everything else, on emails, get done work." Ideally, Rich would like to see medical communities and research work on ways to reach people before leaving school, losing jobs and ending relationships. A key to this is to include interactive media creators in developing solutions rather than making them bad. "If we make them bad, they won't come to the table," he said. "We need their experience in creating tools and devices to approach the situation, introducing a second line of fund — not only profit margins, but also social results. The May natural gas futures contract started from the board of directors on Wednesday, then prepared for another volatile session. The European Union is trying to strengthen its hand against China's growing economic threat, with new powers aimed at a foreign State.The European Commission, the executive arm of the block, proposed new rules to supply fines and block agreements, according to a project obtained by Bloomberg. While China is not specifically mentioned in the proposal, the move follows complaints from European businesses that Asian nation businesses get support they cannot match. Chinese working groups have already complained about the latest initiative, which will need support from EU governments before they become final. The document is a draft and could still change before it is set to be proposed next week. It is the next step in EU efforts to push China away, based on a push by Member States to protect strategic companies from purchases by non-European buyers. In the midst of the steepest recession of almost a century, Europe has shown signs of increasing protectionism. EU governments are discussing the "repatriation" of supply chains after pandemic exposed the region's vulnerability to breaks, while France and Germany say that the block should allow the creation of "European champions" large enough to compete with the United States and China. Member States have expressed an increasing alarm at the prospect of European companies purchased by companies with unlimited credit lines or were forced out of business because rivals can afford to sell under costs. The new rules would be in parallel with the supervision of direct foreign investment, which European governments have ratified in recent years to give them more power to stopin sectors or sectors which they consider crucial. Increased control may also be imposed on minority holdings of more than 10%. Germany has blocked a Chinese offer for the first time in 2018 by selling the potential purchase of Leffeld Metal Spinning AG tool manufacturer. Last year, Chancellor Angela Merkel's government agreed to buy a share of 23% in CureVac AG, at the moment a key player in the race for a coronavirus vaccine that had been the center of speculation acquisition by the United States Alongside similar moves in other Member States, the German government has approved more changes to foreign investment rules to give the government enhanced powers to examine transactions that could affect national security. The new regulations, which require parliamentary approval, are intended for high-tech sectors such as artificial intelligence, autonomous driving and quantum computing. France has recently stopped buying the Carrefour SA food chain by Canada Alimentation Couche-Tard Inc., citing food sovereignty and the need to guarantee supply chains in the middle of pandemics. The company has also seen the purchase of Photonis' Teledyne Technologies Inc., a company that makes nightlife for the military, citing strategic interests. In recent weeks, Italy has coordinated with France to protect truck driver Iveco SpA from an acquisition by China FAW Group Co. Prime Minister Mario Draghi sent a message blocking a China Shenzhen Invenland Holdings Co. offer for the smallLPE SpA. The Government of Spain reported that it could block at least two agreements, one involving utility and another involving a manufacturer of aviation components. According to the EU rules project, companies that generate at least 500 million euros (600 million dollars) of revenues in Europe and have received more than 50 million euros of support from a foreign state in the last three years will need the approval of the block for offers. The EU also wants to be able to fine companies up to 10% of their annual turnover if it finds an unjustly benefited company of a foreign grant -- including an unlimited status guarantee or a credit line that subscribes European rivals. The project warns that it could cancel government contracts granted to undertakings which benefit from an unfair advantage from such subsidies. European officials are seeking the power to inspect the offices of companies outside Europe, with the company's permission and knowledge of the foreign state, according to the project. Regulators suggest ways companies could jeopardize concerns about subsidies, including granting access to infrastructure rivals, fair-term licenses or publishing research. Companies can also reduce market capacity or presence, dive goods or refrain from investment, according to the document. The European Commission refused to comment and the Chinese mission to the EU did not respond to a request for comment. Despite the toughest position, the EU continues to actively build business ties with China, including an investmentThe block has promoted the agreement, which could enter into force at the beginning of next year, as a way to rebalance economic relations with its second largest trading partner. The agreement expands access to the Chinese market for European investors in sectors ranging from cars to telecommunications. It also aims to address the basic Chinese policies that are believed to be market distortions, such as industrial subsidies, state control of enterprises and forced technology transfers. (Bloomberg) -- The Dubai Limitless property developer, one of the biggest losses of the emirate financial crisis in 2009, can end up taking near two decades to complete its debt restructuring under the timeline of its new plan. Limitless has given the creditors guaranteed - both banks and commercial creditors -- two options, according to a recent presentation to the creditors showing the company must approximately 2.8 billion dirhams (762 million dollars). People who are familiar with the matter have confirmed the details of the proposal, asking not to be identified because the information is private. The creditors or receive an advance payment of 50% on the money that are required to resolve or accept a restructure of seven years of 2 billion dirhams worthy of debt structures, according to the terms outlined in the old creditors last year was the hire of consultants for its third restructuring, as the company defaults on some previous agreements that had hit with its banks in recent years. to learn more: Dubai's limitless to hire advisers as third restructuring looms a spokesperson for limitless said "the discussions with our financiers are underway, but, as the talks are private and confidential, we are not free to share details."Limitless was once the child poster for the meteoric rise of Dubai on the global property and the financial scene. Reductions on export taxes for certain goods will be removed, and tariffs on certain products raised from 1 May, the Ministry of Finance said on its website. Import taxes on pig iron, semi-finished and steel scrap will be withdrawn. The measures highlight greater attention to the maintenance of the domestic market and come as the steel mills of the grapple country with the costs of raw material that have passed to historical highs. China produces half of the world's steel and is the largest exporter, but promised to reduce production in 2021 as part of a unit to contain carbon emissions from one of its dirty industries. Tax changes could alter global steel trade and strengthen markets in the middle of a global boom. While tax changes may have someeffect on national prices, investors "remain very confident" on a narrow Chinese steel market, analyst Lin at the CRU Group, said by phone. The volumes covered by these tax changes are small compared to China's huge domestic production. Further information: Global Steel Boom Builds as Rampant Demand Overwhelms Supply The existing levies on imported products were only 1% or 2%. For products exported -- including everything, from hot rolled coil to some types of pipes and stainless steel -- removal of discounts means that exports are subject to value added tax. In addition, the ministry said that taxes will be increased on exports of pork iron ore and some iron-alloyed. A global peak of steel demand sent prices from China to North America rising to multiannual highs, threatening to undermine Beijing's drive for lower production. While this unit has focused on a range of production restrictions, including the Tangshan hub, mills are instead increasing supply between bumper profits and concerns that there may be more curls to come. The peak of steel production also raised iron ore at about a record. Tax changes "reducing import costs, expanding the import of steel resources and supporting the reduction of domestic crude steel production", said the ministry. Steel joins other major industrial raw materials in climbing, adding to inflation concerns, while China tries to maintain its economy on track. The country reported plans to strengthen market controls on raw materials forlimit costs for companies. for further articles like this, visit us on flowersberg.com ©2021 bloomberg L.P.(Bloomberg) -- The British market watchdog proposed to attenuate the top restrictions on investment research for small businesses and fixed income markets in its first efforts to rewrite these rules since the united kingdom left the European union. The Financial Conduct Authority has stated that the work of analysts on enterprises with a market value of less than £200 million (278 million dollars) would be exempt from inflexible rules, which were introduced by the EU reforms mifid ii to force investors to pay research separately from trading. the search for fixed income, currency and basic products would also be free from the restrictions provided for in the fca plan. the enterprises have complained that the curbs have imposed extra costs of conformity without much benefit, the regulator said Wednesday. revisions apply to one of the most controversial parts of the mifid revision of the securities regulations. the united kingdom was a strong supporter of unbelief when the law was originally written before the great brethren, seat of a huge group of asset-management companies interested in the rules, voted for Brexit. While the rules have led to lower taxes for many investors, the fca said Wednesday the highest cost involved in trading of smaller public companies "in part it reflects the least amount of publicly available information." with trading expenses could memorize interest among big investors, with limited effects on competition among brokers, the regulator said. about 79% of public companies with a market value of less than £250 million do not have any available research or are covered by only one analyst, "covering levels that can be insufficient to provide a completely informed vision for investors," said fca. the proposal of the fca comes after that the year last year has simplified the requirements for fair research for the enterprises valued less than 1 billion euros (1.2 billion dollars). the consultation launched Wednesday is part of the broader revision of the capital markets of the united kingdom, which will consider the structure of the market, the rules of trading for shares, bonds and derivatives, the cost of the market of data and of the derivatives of the raw materials, said fca.
