Welcome back to another episode of Basketball Rules Expert. youtube show where we take the rules of the National Federation of High School from the printed page and breathe life into them. Let's simplify, clarify, amplify, and we're going to give them back to a format that you can bring with you on the basketball court. Greetings all my name again is Greg Austin. I've been a high school basketball officer for over a decade and I consider myself an expert on basketball rules. This show is all about helping you on your trip to become an expert in basketball rules as well. Today we are going to try something fun — we are going to have a lightning show round. We will quickly pass to questions and get answers because we need immediate answers in these scenarios. but before I do, I would like to thank our fans of the show: Robert Lloyd Peter Blum Matthew Winn Tim Robinson (S)Very appreciated and very love. If you want to support the show there is a link in the notes of the show below. Today we are going to start with our lightning show. Quick questions quick answers. Not a deep immersion in the rules, just an emphasis on the things we need to know. Game scenario: Player Fouled on a 3-pointer success While the A1 is trying a three-point attempt failed by B1. officials run an intentional foul on B1. The attempt is successful. the official awardfree get to A1 and the ball to team A for a but-in. Was the officials correct? Yes or no? Simple question. An intentional foul in the National Federation of High School disciplines the penalty? This also applies to a flagrant foul; The penalty is the same. two free throws for the offended player or their appropriate substitute and a launch to the team in place closer to the foul. This ALWAYS applies with the exception of an instance: a three-point test that is missing and then it is three free shooting tests. We need to know the rule. simple and simple is two free jets always. always two free jets to the offended player or their replacement if they were injured. and the ball to the team in place closer to the foul. Ding! The only exception is if the three-point test is missing. Then it's three free shooting tests to the player or their replacement and the ball to throw at a dowry point. applies to intentional failures. applies to flagrant failures. the same. simple and simple. so in our case here the attempt was successful. the natural inclination can be "and one". But we know what's worth. So in this case, were officials correct? Yes or no? the answer is not that officials were not correct. Game scenario: A second time out of demand End of play time expires in the fourth trimester with the tied player A1 score failed in the shooting act. team b head coach is granted a time out before the time out is finished, team aCoach requires a timeout. officials deny the timeout request. Was the officials correct? Yes or no? This is a funky part of the rules book. It is close to the end of the game after the expiration of time, but the game is not finished. In this situation there is a rule that we will not allow the next timeouts. A later time out that it is defined in the rules book as a second time out after the time has expired is a strange quirk of the rules is what it is. Was the officials correct in not allowing a timeout after the next time had expired in the game? Yeah. Yes, they were. It is important to know that the clarification is "after the expiry of time". Not that the game is over. After the expiry of time we will not allow the subsequent timeouts to be granted. so, in this case officials were correct? Yeah. Yes, they were Scenario of the game: Airborne Player Requires a Time-OutA1 requires a timeout while the air that holds the ball and goes out of bounds. officials grant the expiry request Was officials correct? Yes or no? A fact of life for high school basketball officials is that interested parties in the game: our partners, ourselves, we are basketball fans. Let's watch basketball. Let's watch basketball NBA. Let's look at collect basketball. The rule set in those different levels of play can be different. This understanding of what the rules are sometimes mistakenly filtering up to high school. In NCAA Mens or NBA, when the time of a player is taking them outa timeout should not be allowed. This doesn't apply to high school. In NFHS Rules, a player holding the ball may require a timeout and should be granted. There is no restriction that they cannot be in the process of having their momentum bring this out of the court. Was the officials correct? Yeah. Yes, they were Scenario of the game: Defender Contacts the ThrowerA1 has the ball for a launch. B1 reaches through the border plan and A1 fails. officials rule a Foul Technical Player on B1 Was they the correct officials? Yes or no? It's an atypical game. One who can watch us. easy to remember even if this during a launch-in. when a defensive player contacts the launcher, as a rule it is an intentional foul. if a defensive player breaks the border plane and contacts basketball that is a Foul Technical player. In this case officials should have ruled an intentional foul on B1. Was the officials correct? No, they weren't. Game scenario: The player he played is discovered not to be in the ScorebookTeam a replacement A12 enters and plays the second period. In the middle of the time the official scorecard notes that A12 is not in the scorecards and informs officials. Officials rule an Administrative Technical Foul and begin the third period with free jets. Was the officials correct? Yes or no? logically this seems to be correct. but we must remember with Fouls Technician there are periods of time that are allowed for the discovery of the Technical Foul.This case a Foul Administrative Technique can only be evaluated if it is discovered while the player is violating. officials discovered that A12 is not in the book while A12 is playing, a Foul Administrative Technician would be the appropriate penalty. but in this case we are outside that period, so officials do not have authority to assess the technical Foul. If A12 return to the game effectively then it would be the appropriate time. So in this case, were officials correct? No. No, they weren't Scenarios: Thrower-In walks on the boundaryThrower A1 steps line on the final line during a launch. officials rule a jet violation officials were correct? Yes or no? Sometimes, in a reflexive way, we see someone stepping forward and we think something illegal happened. but the rule for a pitcher is that they are not allowed to climb to the court. The court begins with the inner border line edge, so in this case officials were correct? no officials were not correct this is a legal game Scenario game: Player with ball slides on FloorA1 diving for a loose ball on the floor A1 slides controls the ball and then scrolls some more officials regulate a travel violation occurred. Was the officials correct? Yes or no? A great hustle game. A player immerses himself on the floor and controls the ball. The player still slips. Before stopping the official travel rules. The gym is erupted. Everyone wants to travel. alllt is not possible to do this — except yes. Yeah, you can. This is a legal game as a rule. Was the officials correct? No, they weren't. Game scenario: The player takes his own airball The A1 attempt fails to reach the basket and A1 catches the ball while it stays aeronautical. Officials rule a travel violation Officials were correct? Yes or No? in the National Federation of High School Rules is legal for a player to take their own airball until it was an attempt. if officials make the judgement that it was an attempt by goal then there is no more team control and the player can take the ball. Why do people think this is a travel violation? because with other rules specifically set the NBA this is a violation. Let's watch those games. We think these rules apply and they don't. So, in this case, were officials correct? No, they weren't. Game scenario: The player makes a basket on the backboardA1 while standing in the backboard shoots the ball on the backboard and the ball passes through the basket. officials rule this a legal game and allow the goal officials were correct? Yes or no? The National Federation of Higher School Rules to deal with a rectangular backboard, the ball cannot pass over the backboard legally by rule this is an illegal game. A breach outside the limits should have been excluded. Is the existence of other rules right? Let's see a highlight from an NBA game. In the NBA game they allow the goal. in the Nationalof High School Rules this is illegal is a violation and the goal should not be marked. In this case were officials correct? No, they weren't. Game scenario: Backcourt player throws the ball from an official in frontcourtA1 throws the ball from the backcourt and hits the official who is in frontcourt. the ball bounces backcourt and is recovered from A2. officials rule this to be a legal game Officials were correct? Yes or no? A1 takes the ride from the backcourt. That means I'm in, they're holding the ball. We've got control of the team on the court. A1 throws the ball at the frontcourt. The ball hits the official and the ball bounces backcourt where A2 recovers the ball. This misleading pass hit the official in court. A2 picked it up. What we need to understand about the state. When the ball was in the back field it has the backcourt status. the ball when it is launched has still the state of backcourt. when the ball contacts the official who is in contact with the frontcourt the ball gains the state frontcourt. Then, the ball goes backcourt where A2 collects the ball. the team caused the ball to go from backcourt to frontcourt and go back to the backcourt without a player touching the ball. This is a law violation. Was the officials correct? No. No, they weren't Game Scenarios: The ball contacts the top of the backboardA1 attempts a field goal that the ball hits the edge then hits the top of theand then passes through the trash officials rule this a legal game Officials were correct? Yes or no? Obviously the back has six sides has the front side has the back side has the left side the right side of the upper side and the lower side only one of those sides is out of play is out of the limits and that is the back side of the back. a ball that contacts the top of the backboard can obviously remain in play as a rule Officials were correct? Yeah. Yes, they were a game scenario: The player returns to the court to grab the A2 ball deflects a ball from A1. The time of A2 takes him out of limits A2 then returns to court grabs the ball and marks officials rule this illegal game Officials were correct? Yes or no? A1 goes to A2. A2 deflates the ball but their momentum takes them out of the limits. They come back to the court, grab the ball and score. Was that a legal game? Yes, as a rule, a legal game. all the player needs to do is establish the incoming state. that you get having a part of their body touching the playing field and nothing touching out of the limits. Once the player has the incoming legal status there is no restriction against grasping the ball and score. So... Was the officials correct? Yeah. Yes they were Show Wrap Up and thanks to Show Supporters Thank you for joining us today on Basketball Rules Expert Youtube show.
