Publishing an attractive magazine with well written articles and beautiful photos requires a lot of time and resources. At the same time, you should focus on building your subscriber base as you also find advertisers, the main ingredients for the long-term success of your publication. If your magazine depends only on advertisers for your recipe or is a subscription-based publication that includes announcements, start by creating a general marketing strategy to find out the best ways to address both. Develop a marketing plan that identifies the goals of the publication. Discover how many subscribers or readers and advertisers you need to achieve these goals. Then identify the demographics of your subscribers, as well as the features of your advertisers so that you know who sells. Delineate as you plan to distribute the publication, as in the newspaper banks, through signatures or if the publication is a Freebie, in local stores, and community centers. Use your website to show the articles and other contents found in your publication. Include the latest issue teaser articles to persuade people to get a copy to read the whole piece. Use a shopping cart that accepts criterion cards to encourage people to subscribe online. Add a page to your website facing advertisers and provide an MDIA kit for download. Create a business page on Facebook and publish information about the next articles and other contents in the next problem. Once the magazine leaves, invite the employees to post comments, as this helps you enter the front of your followers too. Encourage bloggers who post about the same issues as their magazine covers to mention the availability of the next problem. Put the paid-per-click targets on Facebook and include a link to your website to download a gratile sample problem or pay for a discounted subscription. Buy a database of names and addresses of people who serve the demographics of subscribers of your publication. Create and send a lot of postcards or letters to request signatures. Offer a discount to sign for two years, as this gives you spinning capital. Include an Expiration Date in your correspondences to encourage the recipients to sign up immediately. Include your site address to encourage online signatures and provide a shift form to fill and send e-mail to those less inclined to sign up online. If you are a new publication, protect advertisers is complicated, already that you still have a large subscriber base. To neutralize this problem, develop a media kit that focuses on the demographics of your readers, rather than the number of subscribers. As soon as you build your subscriber list, add information that helps convince companies that sufficient people will see the announcement. At the beginning, plan to call the advertisers to persuade them to put an announcement. After being more established, hire a representative of the editor to sell the spacing of the announcement. You can also search for red advertising books, a directory that lists more than 13,000 advertising agencies that buy the spacing of announcements for your customers. Sign up for a booth at street fairs, fairs and other events that attract your readers. Sponsor the event to give your publication more coverage and build familiarity with the name of the magazine. Print extra songs from your publication and deliver them to possible readers at the event. Include a special promotional offer in a card posted to the cover to persuade people to sign up. For a fee, a magazine can be included among the sponsors of an event, obtaining their name and logo in front of potential readers and associating with an activity or making readers Capital markets, most commonly known as financial markets, connect people and entities, whether corporate or governmental, who have money (or â € + Capital) with people and companies they need.
