Knowing how to turn off ads on a Samsung phone is one sure-fire way to get rid of the advert pop-ups that can make using Samsung's stellar phones a pain. Unfortunately, there's isn't a guaranteed and straightforward way to stop the ads from appearing altogether. However, there are a few methods that will help manage the situation and reduce the number of pop-ups. Below, we'll walk you through the process of identifying and removing third-party apps that could be causing the issue as well as blocking pop-up ads through Google Chrome, Samsung Internet and more. Keep in mind that the process may differ depending on the model and age of your Samsung phone. In order for ads to appear, third-party apps must be active on your device. And while there's no certain way to identify the exact apps that make ads appear on your Samsung phone, if you've just noticed the issue, it's worth taking a look at what apps you've been using recently. The below method will help you eliminate the apps that you haven't used much and narrow down those that may be contributing to the ads appearing on your Samsung phone.

1. First, launch the Google Play Store app through the main menu. (Image credit: Samsung) 2. Next, tap on the three lines, which should appear in the upper left corner of your screen. (Image credit: Samsung) 3. Go ahead and select the "My apps & games" option to proceed. (Image credit: Samsung) 4. Next, tap on the Installed tab as shown in the image below. (Image credit: Samsung) 5. You should now see a list of all your installed applications. Go ahead and tap on the Alphabetical sorting option as shown below. (Image credit: Samsung) 6. Next, tap on the Last Used option if available. You should now be able to view the apps that have been recently active, and you can delete those if you wish to do so. (Image credit: Samsung)

How to turn disable pop-up ads in Google Chrome

1. Once you've launched Google Chrome, locate and select the three-dotted icon, which should appear in the upper right corner of your screen. (Image credit: Samsung) 2. In the drop-down menu, tap on the Settings option to proceed. (Image credit: Samsung) 3. Scroll down and select the Site settings option as shown below. (Image credit: Samsung) 4. Go ahead and tap on the "Pop-ups and redirects" option. (Image credit: Samsung) 5. Now, make sure that the option is toggled off. It should appear grey, as indicated in the image below. (Image credit: Samsung) 6. Go back into the Settings menu, scroll down and select Ads. (Image credit: Samsung) 7. Make sure that this option is toggled off too. Similar to the earlier step, the icon should change colors to grey once that's done. (Image credit: Samsung)

How to block ads on Samsung Internet

1. First, launch the Samsung Internet app. (Image credit: Samsung) 2. Next, tap on the three lines, which should appear on in the bottom left corner of your screen. (Image credit: Samsung) 3. Go ahead and tap on the Settings option as shown below. (Image credit: Samsung) 4. Scroll down and select the "Sites and downloads" option. (Image credit: Samsung) 5. Next, locate the "Block pop-ups" option and make sure that it's toggled on. (Image credit: Samsung) 6. Return to the Samsung Internet menu and select Ad blockers. (Image credit: Samsung) 7. You can now pick and download any of the suggested ad blockers that would appear on your screen. (Image credit: Samsung)

How to turn off ads via Samsung Global Goals

If you happen to have Samsung Global Goals set up on your Galaxy smartphone, chances are you may have noticed some ads popping up on your lock screen while your device is charging. This could happen due to the feature being enabled while in charging mode. In order to turn off this setting, all you need to do is to head over to the Samsung Global Goals app > select Settings > toggle off Global Goals whilst charging. (Image credit: Samsung)

Even if you're a clean freak, there's no escaping at least a few smudges. And if you're not, you may be in the camp of people whose phones contain as many germs as a public toilet seat. All of that cloudiness you see is made up of oil, makeup, and other residue (hair spray? Cheetos dust? we don't know your life) that can accumulate and then cause some major issues for your skin. Gross. "All of that dirt and bacteria can quickly break you out," says Joshua Zeichner, the director of cosmetic and clinical research in dermatology at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York City. Sure, Clorox wipes are effective at disinfecting surface germs, but think about it: Do you really want to be putting bleach on your face the next time you answer a call? Not the most appealing thought. That's where Whoosh, a nontoxic cleaning spray made specifically for removing makeup and fingerprints from mobile devices, comes in. It's free of alcohol, ammonia, chlorine, and phosphates (if you don't want those things in your beauty products, why would you want them on your phone?). Spritz a little Whoosh on the screen, rub with the included antimicrobial cloth, and your phone or tablet will gleam like that first time you peeled off the plastic. Another perk? Because the spray also leaves behind an invisible fingerprint-resistant coating on the surface of the screen, gunk won't accumulate as easily. Yes, a makeup remover for your tech gadgets is a little extravagant, but if it means never again having a weird, inexplicable breakout on one side of your face, it's also pretty worth it. It doesn't matter if you moved to Windows 10 using the free upgrade offer, it came pre-loaded on a new device, or you paid $200 for a copy of Windows 10 Pro (opens in new tab) (or $120 for a copy of Windows 10 Home), you'll see ads everywhere — on the Lock screen, Start menu, Action Center, Cortana, etc. Perhaps for many non-technical users, this kind of advertisements can help them to figure out the possibilities with Windows 10, but for those who work with the operating system on a daily basis may actually affect the user experience. Thankfully, Windows 10 let you disable most of these ads, as long you know where to go to find and turn off the switches. In this Windows 10 guide, we'll walk you through the steps to reduce the number of annoying advertisements on your device for a less irritating experience. Windows 10 allows you to remove most of the nagging, but there is not a master switch, you actually need to hunt down the options, which can be troublesome when they're are scatter around, and the operating system doesn't even call them ads. Fortunately, you can use these steps to get rid of ads on your computer. On the Lock screen, Windows 10 displays advertisements in two different ways: through Windows spotlight and using your own custom background. While you can't disable ads when using Windows spotlight, you can choose to show a custom background picture or slideshow, which includes an option to prevent Windows 10 and Cortana from showing ads on the Lock screen. To remove ads from the Lock screen, do the following: Open Settings. Click on Personalization. Click on Lock screen. In the Background drop-down menu, select Picture or Slideshow. Turn off the Get fun facts, tips, and more from Windows and Cortana on your lock screen toggle switch. Microsoft has found a sneaky way to monetize the Start menu. They're not called "ads," they're called "suggested" apps, and it's a mean for Microsoft to lure users into getting apps and services through the Windows Store based on your behavior using the operating system. To remove ads from Start menu, do the following: Open Settings. Click on Personalization. Click on Start. Turn off the Occasionally show suggestions in Start toggle switch. Starting with the Windows 10 Anniversary Update, the operating system also introduced a new feature called Windows Ink, which is just a new fancy name Microsoft picked for the same existing pen support, but with the promise of new improvements and features over time. In this new pen experience, Windows 10 also displays ads in the Windows Ink Workspace to promote apps from the Windows Store that include support for Windows Ink. However, if you're not comfortable seeing these suggestions, you can easily remove the advertisement from the Workspace. To remove ads from the Windows Ink Workspace, do the following: Open Settings. Click on Devices. Click Pen & Windows Ink. Under Windows Ink Workspace, turn off the Show recommended app suggestions toggle switch. Although Windows Ink is available even on devices without a touchscreen, you can only change the option this if you're using Windows Ink on a Surface or another device with pen support. On this new version of the operating system, Microsoft is trying to make easier for users to find and use the new features. One way Windows 10 "helps" users is by pushing tips, tricks, and other suggestions as you use Windows through toast notifications and in Action Center. For example, if you use Chrome at one point in time, you'll begin getting suggestions to switch to Microsoft Edge. If you don't want to get bothered with apps and services suggestions, Windows 10 offers an easy way to disable this form of advertisement. To remove ads from notifications and Action Center, do the following: Open Settings. Click on System. Click on Notifications & actions. Under Notifications, turn off the Get tips, tricks, and suggestions as you use Windows toggle switch. Cortana is your personal digital assistant that Microsoft introduced with Windows 10. While the assistant is very useful in a number of scenarios, if you don't interact with it, the assistant will pipe up now and then to offer suggestions on how to use the feature. Although many users may not consider these suggestions as intrusive ads, Cortana is trying to lure you into using it, which in some way, it can be considered advertisement. If you don't want to Cortana showing you any suggestions, you can easily disable this feature. To remove ads from Cortana in the search box, do the following: Open Cortana in the Taskbar. Click on the Settings (gear) button on the left. Turn off the Taskbar tidbits toggle switch. It seems that app suggestions aren't enough on the Start menu, as Windows 10 also comes bundled with a number of apps that can be considered purely advertisement. We're actually talking about, the "Get Office" app and games, such as Candy Crush Soda Saga, Age of the Empire: Castle Siege, FarmVille 2: Country Scape, Asphalt 8: Airborne, and World of Tanks Blitz. Additionally, let's not forget the Microsoft Solitaire Collection game, which also shows you long video ads if you're not part of the premium offering. If you don't like to see these apps again, you can quickly remove them from your computer with just a few clicks. Open Start. Right-click the tile from "All apps" or from the tiled section, and select Uninstall. Click the Uninstall button again to confirm and to complete the task. It's important to note that some tiles are simply shortcuts to download the app from the Windows Store, which means that you can simply right-click, and select Unpin from Start to remove them. Currently, any built-in app you remove from Windows 10 will return once you install a new feature update. However, after feedback, Microsoft is making changes to prevent the apps you uninstalled from coming back in future updates. You'll see this new change with the Windows 10 Creators Update. We're showing you here the steps to deal a specific number of apps, but computers manufacturers are also allowed to ship their devices with their own set of apps. However, you can use the same approach to remove any apps you don't like. Alternatively, you can use the Settings app to remove any app, including useless bloatware and trials. Open Settings. Click on System. Click on Apps & features. Select the app you want to uninstall. Click the Uninstall button. Click Uninstall again to confirm and to complete the task. Although you can uninstall certain apps posing as advertisement, there are also those apps that are part of the operating system that you can't (or shouldn't) uninstall and often offer ads. This kind of apps can include, the Windows Store, Xbox, Groove Music, and Movies & TV. You probably didn't notice, but every time you open the Start menu, tiles, such as the one from the Windows Store, light up promoting apps and services, and other apps do the same too. If you can't uninstall the app, one thing you can do is to disable the app tile from showing updates. To remove ads from Live Tiles, do the following: Open Start. Right-click an app tile. Select More. Click on Turn live tile off. Or you can alternatively, unpin the apps from the Start menu by right-clicking the app and selecting the Unpin from Start option. How to stop Windows 10 displaying targeted ads In addition to the numerous ads you see in Windows 10, Microsoft also assigns you a unique identification number to track your every move in the Windows Store and on apps to target you with specific ads. If you don't want Microsoft to display targeted ads, you can change your privacy settings to turn off your advertising ID. However, the operating system will still be able to show ads, just not ads based on your computer behavior. To stop Microsoft to target you with ads, do the following: Open Settings. Click on Privacy. Click on General. Under Change privacy options, turn off the Let apps use my advertising ID for experiences across apps toggle switch. If you're only looking reset data tied to your advertising identification number, you can simply turn off the option and then turn it back on. Wrapping things up Once you disable the options we're mentioning in this guide, you'll see the number of ads significantly reduced throughout the operating system. However, keep in mind that these options won't remove advertisements on those apps from the Windows Store that are ad-supported. Those ads can't be disabled. If you're looking to remove ads from Microsoft Edge, remember that if you're running the Windows 10 Anniversary Update, you can install one of those popular ad blocker extensions from the Windows Store. It's also worth to point out that advertisement you see in Windows 10 is different to those you see when you browse the internet. Microsoft won't show ads on the Lock screen or in the Start menu to lure you into buying new sneakers or asteroid insurance. Instead, the operating system will only nag you to get apps and services from the Windows Store. Do you mind Windows 10 showing ads within the operating system?
