Like about 99% of the population, I'm a failed wannabe rock star. Buying my first Yamaha acoustic guitar when I was 14, I took lessons, seldom practiced, but somehow expected to blossom into the next Randy Rhoads or Eddie Van Halen. The closest I got was sitting on the roof of our suburban house, with a pickup clumsily hanging off the guitar and plugged into a tiny speaker, and strumming feedback-tainted chords that drove my neighbors crazy.[Photo: courtesy of Fender]Of course, I wanted to go electric, but there were just too many obstacles. The pickups never sounded good, basically giving your strums an echo effect and a little more noise. And the idea of buying another guitar, plus a speaker, just seemed like too much work for my teenage self, which was guided by inertia and random impulses. Over the years, I've tried out all kinds of more advanced pickups and hybrid guitars, but none of them were really able to create that acoustic alchemy of turning you from folk singer to heavy metalhead in a flash.Now, Fender might just have met that challenge with its latest series of guitars, the American Acoustasonic, a hybrid Telecaster that switches seamlessly between acoustic and electric with the turn of a dial. Handcrafted at Fender's flagship factory in Corona, California, the new instruments feature a fully hollow body, a mahogany neck, open-pore satin finish, and a patent-pending Stringed Instrument Resonance System, which "creates a naturally loud voice with lively harmonics," per Fender's description. Its Mod Knob allows the player to create an infinitely diverse set of sounds and the body can be tapped like a drum, creating a rhythm that resonates. The adaptable axe comes in natural, black, sonic gray, surf green, and sunburst colors.For Fender CEO Andy Mooney, the task was "incredibly simple and a challenge—to design an electric guitar for the working musician," just as company founder Leo Fender would have designed it. "We want to employ technology if it helps with the creation of music and make it customizable at a price that's accessible." After a three-year labor of love to design the Acoustasonic, Fender sent prototypes to a number of different musicians in all variety of genres from country music star Daniel Donato and Brazilian singer-songwriter Rodrigo Amarante to Danny Harrison, the son of late Beatle George Harrison. Encouraged by the positive feedback, Mooney can't wait to introduce the new guitar, which goes on sale today.The brand, which revolutionized music with the first mass-produced solid-body electric guitar 72 years ago, is also introducing some other new products later this week. Last Updated on March 24, 2021 We've all done it. We've gone out and bought useless gadgets that we don't really need, just because they seemed really cool at the time. Then, we are stuck with a bunch of junk, and end up tossing it or trying to sell it on Ebay.On the other hand, there are some pretty awesome tech inventions that are actually useful. For instance, many of the latest home gadgets do some of your work for you, from adjusting the home thermostat to locking your front door. And, if used as designed, these tools should really help to make your life a lot easier—and that's not just a claim from some infomercial trying to sell you yet another useless gadget. Take a look at some of the most popular "smart gadgets" on the market:1. Smart Door Locks A smart lock lets you lock and unlock your doors by using your smartphone, a special key fob, or biometrics. These locks are keyless, and much more difficult for intruders to break into, making your home a lot safer. You can even use a special app to let people into your home if you are not there to greet them. 2. Smart Kitchen Tools Wouldn't you just love to have a pot of coffee waiting for you when you get home from work? What about a "smart pan" that tells you exactly when you need to flip that omelet? From meat thermometers to kitchen scales, you'll find a variety of "smart" gadgets designed to make culinary geeks salivate.3. Mini Home Speaker Play:1 If you love big sound, but hate how much space big speakers take up, and if you want a stereo system that is no bigger than your fist, check out the Play:1 mini speaker. All you have to do is plug it in, connect, and then you can stream without worrying about any interruptions or interface. You can even add onto it, and have different music playing in different rooms. 4. Wi-Fi Security Cameras These are the latest in home security, and they connect to the Wi-Fi in your home. You can use your mobile devices to monitor what is going on in your home at all times, no matter where you are. Options include motion sensors, two-way audio, and different recording options.5. Nest ThermostatThis is a thermostat that lives with you. It can sense seasonal changes, temperature changes, etc., and it will adjust itself automatically. You will never have to fiddle with a thermostat dial or keypad again, because this one basically does all of the work for you. It can also help you to save as much as 12% on heating bills, and 15% on cooling bills. 6. Smart Lighting Control your home lighting from your remote device. This is great if you are out and want to make sure that there are some lights on. It is designed to be energy efficient, so it will pay for itself over time because you won't have to spend so much on your monthly energy bills.7. Google Chromecast Ultra Whether you love movies, television shows, music, etc., you can stream it all using Google Chromecast Ultra. Stream all of the entertainment you love in up to 4K UHD and HDR, for just $69 monthly.8. Canary This home security system will automatically contact emergency services when they are needed. This system offers both video and audio surveillance, so there will be evidence if there are any break-ins on your property. You can also use it to check up on what's happening at home when you are not there, including to make sure the kids are doing their homework.Featured photo credit: Karolina via kaboompics.com acoustic guitar music free download. acoustic guitar music free. free acoustic guitar sheet music for popular songs. acoustic guitar instrumental music free download. free tab music for acoustic guitar. free acoustic guitar sheet music. free acoustic guitar background music. acoustic guitar gospel instrumental music free download
