Volumetric Flask

- A volumetric flask is used to measure very precisely one specific volume of liquid (100 ml, 250 ml, etc., depending on which flask you use).
- This flask is used to prepare a solution of known concentration.
- To make up a solution, first dissolve the solid material completely, in less fluid than required to fill the flask to the mark.
- After the solid is completely dissolved, very carefully fill the flask to the mL mark.
- The top is then sealed and the flask is inverted several times to mix.

The word calibration gets used incorrectly quite a bit, even in our own literature (wereing on it). Calibration actually refers to the act of measuring results from an instrument, and determining its accuracy and precision. Gravimetric testing is one method of performing calibration. Audits become a breeze, as all pipette calibration and operator performance information is stored in one central, secure place. Full operation: a full pipette calibration with 3 x 10 data points takes only about 7 minutes to complete, including furnishing a calibration report. 7.03.2020 - Pipette out 5.0ml of this solution into HSS vial and seal the vial with septa followed by a magnetic cap. Calibration procedure: Set up the instrument as per the conditions. Inject the sample 0.5ml, 1 ml, 1.5 ml, 2.0ml, and 2.5 ml.
